

MP3's are NOT illegal

Yes, you read right. The recording industry would have us all believe that this audio file called an mp3 is a vile entity that is robbing the artists of their hard earned money.

The industry claims that the decline in sales is the direct result of online "piracy". Is the above true or is the decline a result of all the lawsuits, and name calling? Is downloading really piracy or has that idea been invented by an industry that simply refuses to change? Does downloading really hurt the artists or is it the industry's royalty payment practices? Do you think that suing everyone will really bring the customers back?
